About the Seminar:

In the constantly changing environment of the twenty-first century, Socio-Emotional Learning (SEL) has evolved as a vital framework for providing individuals with essential abilities beyond traditional academic knowledge, which is an important component of national development. At its foundation, SEL promotes individuals' overall development by cultivating emotional intelligence, resilience, and interpersonal skills and also SEL prepares them to be proactive and sympathetic citizens. These abilities are essential for building a cohesive society, encouraging effective leadership, and cultivating inclusive communities. Furthermore, incorporating SEL into school can result in higher academic performance, reduced socioeconomic inequities, and increased general well-being, establishing the groundwork for a developed India that values holistic development and collective growth. SEL comprises a wide variety of competences that help people to understand and control their emotions, create and achieve good objectives, feel and demonstrate empathy for others, form and sustain meaningful relationships, and make responsible decisions. These abilities are critical for negotiating the difficulties of contemporary life, both emotionally and professionally. In an age of technical developments, globalization, and quickly changing social dynamics, the capacity to adapt, work successfully, and communicate empathically has become increasingly important. SEL offers an organized strategy to developing these talents, equipping individuals to flourish in different situations and make important contributions to society. SEL represents a significant paradigm change in education and human development in the twenty-first century. By developing emotional intelligence, interpersonal skills, and resilience, SEL provides individuals with the tools they need to handle complicated obstacles and flourish in various situations. Beyond individual advantages, SEL helps to develop inclusive communities, improve academic performance, and promote general well-being.
